Empirical Spirits

Established in 2017 by two alumni from René Redzepi's Noma, Mark Emil Hermansen and Lars Williams, the distillery was founded because both Williams and Hermansen were highly inspired by "the role flavour plays in our ability to create and transport experiences". The duo did not want to replicate the spirits that already existed in the market. Instead, they wanted to bottle the intangible — memories, the sense (and scents) of a place, a mood, a present; all these experiences became fodder to create flavours that would challenge both themselves and their drinkers.

Empirical Spirits' ground zero involved a "maniacal approach", in their own words, towards distillation. Custom-built equipment, new fermentation techniques, and ingredients sourced from around the world were measures taken towards cementing the brand's novelty, and still, it was not enough to merely reinvent the tools of the traditional distillation. Empirical Spirits decided to create a base spirit of their own, with cues borrowed from vodka, sake and beer production.

FIO Wines

Fio Wines find its origin in an encounter at a wine-tasting event, on a Caribbean Island, over a decade ago. The protagonists were one of the most high-profile wine growers in the world, Dirk Niepoort (who absolutely loves Mosel wines), and a child of the Mosel, Philipp Ketterern, the latest of a long dynasty of Ketterern in Piesport. They talked, and it clicked, as Philipp recalled: "Dirk put my ideas upside down and got me on the path to produce elegant Mosel wines made in the traditional way." Meanwhile, the son of Dirk, Daniel, entered the winery and now lives in the Mosel.

A fascinating project between three amazing people. Two great young wine makers, in Philipp and Daniel, are being guided by the legendary Dirk Niepoort. Fio stands for common thread and refers to the community of minds between the three.

Roger Coulon

Roger Coulon boasts a history as long as any in the Champagne region; indeed Eric and his wife Isabelle Coulon represent the eight generation of the family to be involved in the production of quality champagne. A “terroir is all” approach is very much at the heart of this outfit, evidenced by the fact that Coulon limits artificial inputs in the vineyards as much as possible. Instead, he practices what he calls ‘reasoned agriculture’, restricting herbicide and pesticide use, favoring techniques traditional techniques to keep pests away.

Quite unusually for a Champagne vigneron, Coulon shows great pride in his old Pinot Meunier vines, which have traditionally divided the region with some holding the varietal in low regard. The result, a superb selection of artisan Champagnes, which boast great richness, depth and terroir-based complexity.

Valentin Zusslin

Marie Zusslin and her brother Jean-Paul are the 13th generation of their family to make wine in Orschwihr and tend Riesling vines in their terraced monopole lieu-dit vineyard, Clos Liebenberg. In addition to the sandstone-based clos, they farm two other hillside terroirs, Bollenberg (iron-rich clay and limestone with marine deposits) and Grand Cru Pfingstberg (clay and sandstone).

Since 1997, the estate is led solely by the principles of biodynamic viticulture in order to re-create a universe suitable for biodiversity. These principles encourage the expression of the soil and environment from Zusslin's three terroirs. A strict selection of their grapes in the vineyards and at the cellar gives to the wines concentration and elegance.

Equipo Navazos

Equipo Navazos are making Sherry sexy again. What originally started out as a private buying club for an outstanding Amontillado located in the cellar of Miguel Sánchez Ayala, has become one of the most sought after series of bottlings sourced from, and inspired by the wines of Jerez and Montilla-Moriles. Jesús Barquín, a professor of criminal law at the University of Granda and Eduardo Ojeda, the technical director of Grupo Estévez, guided by their vast knowledge of, and unparalleled access to, the best wines, cellars and soleras of the region, have since 2005 assembled one of the finest offerings of Sherries in the market.

Since that first cask of Amontillado, labeled simply Bota de Amontillado no.1 in honor of the short story by Edgar Allan Poe, each successive bottling as been numbered, bottled en rama, limited in release and quick to sell out. A navazo is a typical home farmland in Sanlúcar de Barrameda, close to the shore where the lands are usually excavated from the dunes by the growers, in order to benefit from the moisture of the phreatic layer. Nowadays, due to the urban expansion, they have become rare, but in the past they were surrounding bodegas like Sánchez Ayala where it all started.

Douro/Barraida, Portugal

Niepoort

Founded in 1842, the small Port house of Niepoort is now run by 5th generation brother and sister Dirk and Verena Niepoort. It's easy to forget that it was only a few years ago that Niepoort was only sought out by a small band of faithful followers, as stock of remarkable, artisan wines built up in the cramped old Niepoort lodge in Rua Serpa Pinto in Vila Nova de Gaia. These days, with a formidable international reputation which spans all styles from aged tawny to vintage, and all points in between, demand threatens to outstrip supply. Ports are all made at the old Museu de Lagares in Vale de Mendiz, which has the only circular granite Lagares in the Douro.

Niepoort's mission has always been to be a "niche player", to produce distinctive Ports and Douro wines, combining centuries-old tradition with innovation. This continues today with new vineyard projects to produce dry, natural wines in the Douro - Bairrada - Dão triangle. The importance attached to understanding soils, climates and grape varieties has led the current head of the business Dirk Niepoort down the path of Biodynamics, a practise that respects the "moods" of Nature, to find a balance between biodiversity and minimum intervention, and the wines really speak for themselves. Many of their vineyards now have organic certification, which is very much against the grain in contemporary Port making. After 150 years of doing things just a little differently, Niepoort are now highly respected for their delicious Ports and an increasing array of natural table wines.

Beau Paysage

Beau Paysage, meaning “beautiful landscape”, has been around for 18 years now, but besides the most dedicated oenophiles, not many have heard of them. Limited production doesn’t help while highly discreet distribution to only select clients in Japan obscures them even further.

Eishi Okamoto, like his high elevation vines in Tsugane’s hillsides, is a quiet overcomer and a resolute fighter. He has evolved from conventional winemaking to a natural philosophy. Despite lost harvests and criticisms for his “odd” wines, he still produces every single bottle by hand today. Okamoto-san makes less than 10,000 bottles a year, which sell out prior to release. His wines are impossible to find in retail stores, as they are all pre-allocated to the best natural wine bars and restaurants around the world.

Ribera del Duero, Spain

Dominio de Pingus

Having already made a name for himself as a winemaker at Hacienda Monasterio, Peter Sisseck established the winery in 1995. His aim was to produce an unmistakably Spanish, terroir-driven wine. Peter's tiny production of fewer than 500 cases comes from three parcels of ancient, head-pruned Tempranillo vines. His true genius is demonstrated in the vineyard.

"Tinto Fino is important," he explains. "A lot of cuttings of Tempranillo have come in from Rioja, so not all vineyards in Ribera del Duero are Tinto Fino. There is a difference. All the vines in my plots are very old. They have never been fertilised nor treated with pesticides and all grow following the traditional en vaso system. They are perfect."

Badenhorst

Andre Adriaan Badenhorst grew up in the vineyards of the infamous wine estate Groot Constantia in Western Cape, South Africa. After working a few harvests at Chateau Angelus, Alain Graillot in the north Rhone, cousins Hein and Adi Badenhorst purchased Kalmoesfontein farm and restored a cellar that had been neglected since the 1930s.

Here, they now make natural wines traditionally, vinifying in old foudres and cement vats. The vineyards on Kalmoesfontein farm are made up of very old bush-vines planted with Chenin Blanc (average 40 years old), Cinsault (average 45 years), and Grenache (average 58 years). Located on a mountain range which is a granite outcrop, the vines are un-irrigated and farmed as biologically as possible.

Movia

For over three centuries, Movia's vineyards on both sides of the Italian-Slovenian border have produced wines that defy categorisation.

Purchased by the Kristancic family in 1820, the estate is now led by Ales, whose approach to winemaking is historically-minded but radical. Whites are aged in 600-litre Slovenian oak casks or traditional Slovenian barriques, leaving them on the lees without stirring for more than two years. Reds are aged between three to seven years, but racking is never performed. Rather, Ales' fining and filtering procedures are governed by the atmospheric pressure incurred by the arrival of the new moon. Subject to the environment and the cosmos alike, this wholly natural approach presents wines in a state of brilliant clarity.

Samaroli

Samaroli has become synonymous with rarity, legend, and overwhelming sensory and aesthetic beauty. Throughout its heydays in the 1980s, Samaroli released dozens of bottlings which are now considered legendary, subject to intense competition whenever they appear at auction.

The company— originally founded by Silvano S Samaroli— was one of the first dedicated bottlers to actively promote cask strength whisky, and is still one of the only ones to tout the beneficial effects of bottle-ageing with the beloved line on its rear labels: “Further matures in its bottle”.

Clase Azul

Clase Azul reflects a deep and thoughtful appreciation of Mexican traditions. Produced in the highlands of Jalisco, this exquisite line of tequilas is the result of meticulous attention to every part of the production process.

Organic blue agave is cooked in brick ovens for 72 hours, before they are crushed to extract the juices and mixed with a proprietary yeast. Once fermentation is complete, the alcohol is distilled twice with careful attention to ensure the highest quality spirit.

Bottles are individually hand-sculpted and painted by hand by over a hundred artisans in Santa Maria Canchesdá. Clase Azul is a tequila that redefines tequila.

Travelling from city to city, Amass works with preferred distillers on small-batches of premium spirits. Each handcrafted bottle is the product of creative collaboration and meticulous iteration. Clean botanics for modern life, a reimaged drink.

NON

There he was in 2015 – juicing for the non-alcoholic drinks pairing, at Noma in Copenhagen, one of the first of its kind. And he hated it. “It was so fucking tedious,” says Chef William Wade.

Four years later, he’s building on that foundation for his new venture, NON – with business partner Aaron Trotman – a zero-alcohol wine alternative made in Melbourne that channels the boundary-pushing non-alcoholic drinks pairings gaining traction in restaurants worldwide. Trotman had the idea; Wade had the know-how. For those enjoying a tippie, Non offers a way do it more responsibly, and with less hangover potential.

Going forward, the Melbourne label wants to follow in the footsteps of microbreweries: making seasonal and limited releases.
